

Re: Salvinorin A decreases mortality and improves neurological outcome in a neonatal mouse hypoxia model.

This is a relative simple study to investigate the potential protective effects of salvinorin A on neonatal brain hypoxia, a condition that might induce life-long disabilities. The result is interesting and worth to be shared with the science community for further investigations since there is no medication available to protect the brain in such situations. It seems that this novel compound might have promising potentials.